Why Trust a God Who Disappoints?

A serious diagnosis took Lori Ann Wood on a faith detour she never saw coming. As a lifelong believer, she felt profound disappointment in the God she thought she knew. Wanting answers, but more than anything, needing permission to ask the questions, Divine Detour is a result of a risky decision to embrace those difficult questions. She shares her hard-won insights through relatable stories, inviting you along on a forty-day journey deep into the heart of a God who often doesn't behave as we'd like.

AUTHOR

LORI ANN WOOD lives in the shadow of the Ozark Mountains in beautiful Bentonville, Arkansas, with her husband, the unsuspecting guy she chased all the way from ninth grade to grad school.

She is mom to three world-changing young adults, one impressive son-in-law (who all live too far away) and a miniature dachshund named Pearl (who threatens to never leave). Her new favorite role is appropriately spoiling her granddaughter Hazel.

REVIEWS

“A beautiful book teaching us to how to hold grief with gratitude and turn it all into grace... Read this book either as a forty-day journey or as one sitting binge—either way, you will return to it again and again for her wit and wisdom. There are little lessons everywhere and hope for everyone.”

—Kathy Izard, author of The Hundred Story Home and The Last Ordinary Hour

“She writes with the kind of authenticity that simply cannot be taught, and her work is punctuated by haunting turns of phrases with the power to rattle teeth. I cannot wait to get my hands on Divine Detour and recommend it to the many, many people I know in need of its message.”

—Jonathan Merritt, contributing writer for The Atlantic and author of Learning to Speak God from Scratch

“This is a gift to anyone struggling with uncertainty, health issues, or trying to find footing in the world.”

—Margaret Feinberg, author of More Power to You

“This book offers strong encouragement for those going through difficult life and faith challenges.”

—Brian Allain, founder of Writing For Your Life, Publishing in Color, How to Heal Our Divides, and Compassionate Christianity
